CASE STUDY | HARRODSBURG, KY

King Middle School

King Middle School has more than 600 students in grades 6-8. “We had big, long lines of tables with attached pod seats. There were white walls and gray tables. There was no branding of any kind,” Minor said. “We offered up what was essentially a blank canvas.”

The Result

In the end, not only did Minor find that students were happier, but they also were eating more in the cafeteria. “Kids will eat with their friends first, then with their eyes and then with their belly,” he said. “Students who brought their lunch and sat at their prison tables and didn’t talk to anyone are now going through the line with their friends because they can sit with their friends.”

Andrew Jackson High School

AJHS is home to 613 students and 61 staff. Having never experienced any major renovations, the school's cafeteria had become outdated in terms of its operational efficiency and serving capacity. The lack of updates to the cafeteria led to the school's meal options falling out of favor with students.

The Result

Once complete the final product provided a beautiful and visually appealing aesthetic that introduced a design build meant to emulate today's retail-like atmosphere. The kitchen and cafeteria became far more operationally sound and efficient through its addition of a food prep room as well as two serving lines—increasing the total number of access points from two to four.

THE RIGHT DESIGN SOLUTIONS FOR YOUR SCHOOL

We understand what it takes to serve in the educational market. In fact, we've been partnering with schools since the 1980s to learn more about the challenges they face and the solutions that work best for them. Today, our team uses that experience to develop equipment — and the technology that drives it — to make K-12 school foodservice easier. So whether you count your students by the hundreds or by the thousands, LTI has the ideal serving line solution complete with design services for your school's dining facility.
